

"Burp" Your Resources

Dear educators,

My favorite way to welcome spring is opening all the windows in the house, pushing out the stale air and bringing in the fresh scents of the season.

Apparently, some people call this "burping" your home.

If springtime is inspiring you to "burp" your teaching toolbox, refresh it with new PBS content, including:

- A historical chapter on Little Golden Books with The Look Back.
- A new teacher guide for implementing THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION series.
- Our new science collection, Field Notes on Climate.

Finally, two quick reminders:

- Registration for the America at 250 Educator Summit closes May 1. Register now to secure your spot!
- You can still claim PBS nerd socks by completing a short survey on The Look Back.

Happy exploring!

Little Golden Books' lasting imprint

Early access to books can help grow kids' love of reading, but children's books were once much harder to come by. In this episode of The Look Back, learn how Little Golden Books changed childhood. PLUS: Author-illustrator Kevin Henkes takes us behind the book-making scenes. (Grades 4-9)

New educator guide

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION classroom collection on PBS LearningMedia offers more than 35 resources designed by teachers and subject matter experts. Check out the new educator guide to help you align the content to your curriculum. (Grades 3-12)

Field Notes* is here!

We are thrilled to share the first episodes of Field Notes on Climate! Get started with an episode about the impacts of our travel choices and how folks are making bicycling a more accessible option. PLUS: share students' climate questions or topic suggestions for Ami to cover in the future! (Grades 6-12)

Behind the scenes with PBS Wisconsin Education

Arts and Books Madness in La Crosse

PBS Wisconsin (and Clifford) had a blast at the School District of La Crosse Books and Art Madness event. We loved the opportunity to share reading activities and resources with families.
