

You. Are. Awesome.

Dear educators,

As Teacher Appreciation Week comes to a close, we hope you've been surrounded by gratitude from the kids, families, and colleagues you support every day. Thank you for everything you do.

Explore resources created with and for amazing educators just like you, including:

- A new story in *The Ways* about an annual fishing camp
- An episode on water quality and citizen science from Field Notes on Climate
- Daniel Tiger activities for helping littles practice using their words

Happy exploring!

Deep Snow Camp

The Sokaogon Chippewa Community hosts seasonal camps to pass on cultural knowledge to future generations. In a new story from The Ways collection, learn about a winter camp that teaches traditional and modern fishing techniques. (Grades 6-12)

Making waves

How does increased rainfall impact water quality? Join Ami to find out in this episode of Field Notes on Climate. Hear from young citizen scientists and educator Brian Counselman about how and why they collect water quality data. Scroll through the episode page for bonus video content to explore more. (Grades 6-12)

---

Practice sharing feelings

Kids (and grown-ups!) don't always know how to share what they're feeling. With a little practice, it gets easier! Use these short clips from Daniel Tiger's Neighborhood along with classroom and at-home activities to help children use their words to identify and share their feelings. (Grades PreK-K)

Youth media film festival

Madison West High School hosted its first Our City, Our Voices film festival in April. It was organized by social studies teacher Carrie Bohman, who implemented PBS Wisconsin Youth Media this spring. Learn more about Youth Media and hear from some of Bohman's students on the PBS Wisconsin blog.
